Divine Inspiration

A picture's worth a thousand words—especially when you're trying to describe your wedding vision to vendors. That's why many brides have begun to create inspiration boards: colorful collages, either online or on poster board, full of photos that help convey a personal wedding style. To see just how helpful they can be, we asked five real brides to share their wedding vision boards for them. Check out the results, then build your own. It's a great way to get started!

Writer: NINA NOCCIOLINO Editor: LINDA HIRST

Sarah Commito, 29

THE VISION A working farm in the hills of Vermont is the site of Sarah's August wedding to Morgan Stuart. For this casually elegant fête (the reception will take place in a restored barn), the bride wants lots of unstructured flowers in an earthy green, white and brown color scheme that echoes the idyllic locale.

THE VISUALS We cultivated a classic-yet-comfortable aura on this couple's board with imagery that's both rustic and refined: a delicate, flowy gown, a bouquet embellished with berries, tiers of floral-iced cupcakes and other elements with a clean design and natural hues.
